The University of Saint-Étienne, the CERCRIID and the Maison Française d'Oxford will bring together leading law and politics experts to discuss some key subjects on BREXIT a few weeks after the agreement which is expected in October 2018 between the EU and the UK. First of all, the aim of the conference is to provide a scientific forum for discussing the consequences of BREXIT on:

- the political position of the UK in the World and Europe;
- the relationships between the four nations of the UK;
- the future of British institutions, Parliament and the courts.

The second aim of the conference is to give some concrete analysis on a few subjects dealing with law and economics. After the October's agreement, another one will be concluded on the future commercial relationship. The conference will focus on the possible nature of the future commercial agreement, the competition law, financial services and intellectual property law to show progress and difficulties on these central economic matters.

Debates will be based on papers written a few weeks before the conference. These texts will be discussed by the audience, mainly PhD students from the University of Lyon and the Maison Française d'Oxford.
